I Know That One!

There is a good chance that someone you know has quoted a favorite line from a movie, novel, play, song, television show, or other entertainment source sometime today. And you probably knew exactly where that line originated, because you have seen, heard, or read it. Maybe you were even able to quote the line that follows it!

We do this regularly—share memorable lines from our favorite forms of entertainment. There are lines that become inside jokes among friends, lines that become part of family lore, lines that touch our hearts, and lines that are just so notable you have to say them yourself! Some of the most memorable lines are hundreds of years old, so why is it that we still repeat them today?

THINK LINK

- What memorable lines have made their way into your everyday speech?
- What types of emotions make you remember lines the best? Why?
- How does life influence art? How does art influence life?

All the Feels

Why do we remember some things and forget others? Emotion can play a part. Some studies suggest that the stronger the emotion a person feels during an experience, the more likely that person will remember the experience. Memory can also be “jogged.” If a person “re-feels” an emotion, it can lead to a stronger recollection.

A large, illuminated sign for the Broadway musical Hamilton. The sign features a silhouette of a person standing on a star with the word "HAMILTON" written across it. Below the star, it says "AN AMERICAN MUSICAL". The sign is surrounded by a border of small lights.

RODGERS

The Broadway musical Hamilton is one of the most successful (and quotable) shows of all time.

Earworms

An earworm is a piece of music that gets stuck in your head on a loop. Why this happens most likely has to do with having heard the music recently and repeatedly. It may also be tied to involuntary memory, which is when something seems to just pop into your head. This is usually because there has been some emotional trigger connecting a current experience to something in the past that the music was a part of.
