CHAPTER
ONE

TV HOST,
ATHLETE,
OR SPORTSCASTER?

“Mom’s home!” Mason announced. “Get ready to lose,” he then added in a superior tone. Mason was the youngest member of the Harris household. But he was always the first to point out when his two siblings were wrong. And he always thought they were wrong.

“I could hear you yelling from the driveway,” Mom said as she hung up her jacket. “What kind of game are you three playing?”

“We’ve made a bet,” Sophia replied. “Mason thinks that Nate Burleson is a television host. Liam thinks he’s a football player.”

CHAPTER ONE

“And what do you think he does?” Mom asked as she laughed a little at their creative conflict resolution. The siblings often argued. But they always seemed to find fun ways to work through their disagreements.

“This whole thing began when I called Burleson a sportscaster, which he is,” Sophia insisted. She crossed her arms and nodded once in a show of confidence. As the oldest child, she often knew a thing or two that her younger brothers did not.

The kids all waited for their mother to identify the winner of the bet. But she simply asked, “So what does the winner of this bet receive?”

“In addition to bragging rights,” Liam said in his own cocky tone, “the winner gets to pick the film for this week’s family movie night. Sophia wants to watch a comedy. I’ve picked out a horror movie. And Mason wants to watch a superhero flick.”

“Hmm,” Mom joked, “maybe I should just choose the person whose taste in movies best matches mine.”

“Mom!” they all said at once.
