THE COMPETITORS

Two heavyweights roam the African savanna. Neither the African elephant nor the white rhino look for fights. They are both herbivores. They eat plants rather than hunting animals for food.

No animal is big or strong enough to attack these animals! But they both know how to defend themselves if they must.

AFRICAN ELEPHANT RANGE

■ RANGE

The African elephant is the largest land mammal on Earth. How could it lose a fight?

Several adaptations help elephants on the savanna. Their huge ears keep them cool in the heat. Their trunks are amazingly useful. They can lift 550 pounds (250 kilograms). The trunks can also pick up small things like fruit or berries.
