BLOODY BATTLEFIELDS

You are exploring an old battleground. Suddenly, a strange noise surprises you. It sounds like screaming. Could it be a ghost of battles past?

A woman with long brown hair, wearing a beige sweater and blue jeans, is seen from the side, carrying a grey backpack. She is looking towards a glowing, ethereal figure in a grassy field. The figure appears to be a soldier in a military uniform, possibly a World War I era, with a glowing aura around it. The background features a large tree, a wooden fence, and a vast, open landscape under a clear sky.

Many brave souls have died at war. Some may still haunt the fields where they fell.

THE GHOST IN THE WINDOW

The Alamo is a mission in San Antonio, Texas. It became a battlefield in 1836. There, a small number of Texans fought a large Mexican army. The Texans lost. But they are remembered as heroes.

Some ghosts of the fallen may still guard the mission.

RESTLESS BONES

Fallen soldiers were buried on the Alamo's grounds. Today's workers often stumble across lost bones.

HISTORY CONNECTION

Texas used to be part of Mexico. Texans fought for and won independence. They shouted, "Remember the Alamo!" in battle.
