

WORMS

A close-up photograph of a reddish-brown earthworm, likely a species of Lumbricus, crawling through a forest floor. The worm is the central focus, showing its segmented body and moist, glistening texture. It is surrounded by dark, rich soil, decaying brown leaves, and some green moss. The background is slightly blurred, emphasizing the worm. A yellow rectangular box with a dotted border is overlaid on the upper part of the image, containing the text "Have you seen a worm?".

Have you seen a worm?

Worms live in the dirt.
They come out when it rains.
